What does it mean for you to be an indigenous owned organisation in Australia?

We are very proud of our ownership model and the heritage it brings into the business. It is important to Garli Group make a positive impact, and our ownership model provides us a differentiator to other organisations offering similar services.

However, at the Garli Group, our strategy to employ Aboriginal people, use Aboriginal suppliers and contractors in our supply chain is 'Business As Usual'. We embed it into all our decisions and business processes.

How has the Australian business landscape changed for your business over the last 10 years?

Previously mining companies and the wider mining industry would offer Aboriginal businesses contracting and supply opportunities.

However in the last 10 years, the business landscape has changed with Federal and State Governments promoting Indigenous Procurement Policies and also providing more business opportunities for Aboriginal people and companies. This means more Indigenous-owned businesses and service providers are entering the market, making for a much more dynamic, vibrant and competitive operating environment.

What are some of the key trends in your industry that will be affecting your enterprise over the coming few years?

As we are a mining service provider, we are impacted by many of the same trends and market-forces which impact the rest of our industry. These include:

- Mineral supply and prices (Iron Ore, Nickel, Lithium etc)
- New mineral exploration and development
- Renewable Energy Initiatives and Projects
- Australian Federal and State Government Budgets and infrastructure spending
- Global conflicts and impact on investment, oil / fuel supply and pricing, and uncertainty
- New markets eg South East Asia
